The Prudential in 1903.

During last year The Prudential wrote larger amount of business than it did in any other year since it was founded, placing no less than $293,000,000 of new insurance, bringing the total amount of insurance now in force up to $931,-

This result attests its popularity, and such figures have not been equalled by any other company when of the same age as The Prudential, nor by The Prudential itself in any former year.

The causes which have brought about such exceptional success apparently are greater appreciation of life insurance by the masses and the excellent business methods of The Prudential.
